

Ethical Fitness® Spring 2007 Seminars

In a world as complex as ours, with as many differing but legitimate points of view, figuring out “the right thing to do” in a tough situation can be a lonely, difficult call — and a powerful signal of leadership.

We all face “right vs. wrong” choices every day, where we intuitively know “the right thing to do” — and simply must summon our courage to act. Far more troublesome are those “right vs. right” dilemmas for which there is more than one equally defensible course of action to choose from depending on your point of view. How do we get past the indecision and second-guessing? How do we finally resolve those “inner chum” questions that plague us in our families, our workplace, and our communities?

Based on the popular book How Good People Make Tough Choices by founder Rushworth M Kidder, our popular 1-day Ethical Fitness® Seminar offers a fresh way of making decisions as to “the higher right” in these tough-choice situations.
